LEGEND

① Header - will contain h1 title stating website name, and on mobile devices will have a hamburger (☰) icon to expand the navigation menu.

② Navigation - on mobile will be expanded and collapsed by selecting the ☰ icon.

On higher resolutions, this will be displayed as a navbar with the website logo on the far left. Hovering over a word will highlight it, and the name of the current page will also be highlighted. Clicking a word will send the user to the relevant page. (Selecting logo image will return the user to the home page).

③ Body - The main content of the body will all be divided into large sections. Each section will have a h2 header followed by images and any relevant text. Examples of main sections could be featured content such as locations, activities, or holidays. These sections will be coloured the same, be spaced by approximately 10px and have rounded corners for a fluid modern design.

④ Sub sections - A main section will be a flex parent that contains flex children displaying information for featured holidays. These sub sections will have a h3 header, an associated image such as a flag for the relevant location, and brief description of the holiday being offered. Under the parent header it may also be recommended to visit the "View Holidays" page for more information.

On mobile these sections will flex vertically as normal block elements, but on website will flex in the same row to maximise screen usage.

⑤ Aside - Additional information such as relevant news stories will be available in an aside. The section will have a h2 header, and will be followed by divided sections which will each have a h3 header, a relevant paragraph of information, and perhaps an associated image if relevant, followed by a dashed or dotted border. On mobile this will be at the bottom of the page, and on larger resolutions will be seperated onto the right side of the screen.

⑥ Footer - The footer will end each page stating a small line that the site is for a fictional site of the name "Leading choice Getaways".
